

blow holes. When they came together the blows sounded like the fall of a pile driver, only not so clear, and the thrashing of their tails threw the water half a hundred high. The crew of the life watched the antics for nearly half an hour, during which the larger whale was usually driven in toward the shore. — Philadelphia Times

There are thirty-two compositions on the market to prevent eddy-current growth on iron ships, and none of them is the work.

[illegible]